Note: I have a second video that shows the finished product, but I am only allowed one video to upload. I have never used a CNC router machine before and wasn't sure what to expect in complicity of use. My etching needs are small, so this small volume/footprint machine was a perfect solution, especially give its low cost.

IIRC, a discontig memory implementation is needed for the I2 to use more than 256 MB, due to the memory layout on this machine (with aliased memory etc -- see the R3000 MC spec). I kind of lost track of this issue recently, so I may have forgotten some details and got part of the above totally wrong :) JB.
